Eating Disorders Developing a Gold Standard Service

Wednesday 6 July 2016 Manchester Conference Centre Manchester

The Government has announced the ambition of faster care and expanded services for teenagers with eating disorders: "We know that eating disorders are most likely to affect those aged between 14 and 25 and, if they go untreated for more than 3 to 5 years, the chances of recovery are greatly reduced, while incidents of self-harm increase. We also know that anorexia kills more than any other mental health illness. As investment in new services expands access to care, teenagers suffering from eating disorders like anorexia will get help much more quickly, and from 2017/2018 a new waiting time measure will track the increasing number of patients being seen within a month of being referred, or within a week for urgent cases."

Prime Minister pledges a revolution in mental health treatment 2015

"It is vital that children and young people with eating disorders and their families and carers can access effective help quickly. Offering evidence-based, high-quality care and support as soon as possible can improve recovery rates, lead to fewer relapses and reduce the need for inpatient admissions. The availability of dedicated community eating disorder services has been shown to improve outcomes and cost effectiveness. In 2015, the government announced an additional £30m funding a year (recurrent for five years) to support the development of dedicated community eating disorder services. This will also release further general capacity into CAMHS to help young people in mental health crisis or who may be self-harming. The programme will be delivered within the CYP IAPT programme framework which promotes early access to collaborative, effective, evidence-based and outcome-focused treatment. The sooner someone with an eating disorder starts an evidence-based NICE approved treatment the better the outcome." NHS England

"A waiting time standard for early intervention in psychosis will come into effect from April 2016 and one for children and young people with eating disorders the following year"

The Mental Health Taskforce Report, February 2016

"The number of children and young people with an eating disorder is on the rise and it is right that the Government has made this a priority and that we now have a clear waiting time standard. It is clinically proven that patients recover most quickly when we treat them as early and as close to home as possible. By prioritising our focus on doing this we can minimise the number of young people who end up needing more specialised in-patient care."

Dr Martin McShane, National Clinical Director for Long Term Conditions at NHS England

This conference focuses on improving services for children and young people with eating disorders, meeting the new national waiting time standard, and ensuring gold standard care. There is a particular focus on developing rapid early intervention services in line with the new waiting time standard, meeting quality standards for eating disorder services, preventing relapse, commissioning effective services for eating disorder, and looking forward to the 2017 updated NICE guidance and waiting time standard.
